Project Objectives

IUScholarWorks is a service of the IU Libraries of Indiana University Bloomington (IU Bloomington) which is a public research university located in Bloomington, Indiana, in the United States, with additional technology support from University Information Technology Services to make the work of IU scholars freely available and to ensure that these resources are preserved and organized for the future. IUScholarWorks website provides a platform for scholars, students and faculty to deposit their scholarly works, publish an online journal and increase the availability of research data. The objectives of this website are:

- Increase the number of IU faculty and student who deposit their research data.
- Increase the number of items deposited.
- Increase the visibility and usage of IUScholarWorks.
- Increase the number of readership for online journal
- Provide easy navigation for IU faculty and students to deposit their research data and for public users to access the journals and articles.

User Demographics

Indiana University has a combined student body of more than 110,000 students, including approximately 43,000 students enrolled at the Indiana University Bloomington campus and approximately 31,000 students enrolled at the Indiana University – Purdue University Indianapolis (IUPUI) campus. University wide counts sums up to 8,733 Academic staff, 110,436 students and 21,260 postgraduates. In addition to its two core campuses, Indiana University comprises six smaller campuses and three centers/extensions spread throughout Indiana. The smaller campuses are:

- Indiana University East (IU East) is located in Richmond, Indiana.
- Indiana University Kokomo (IU Kokomo) is located in Kokomo, Indiana.
- Indiana University Northwest (IU Northwest) is located in Gary, Indiana.
- Indiana University South Bend (IU South Bend) is located in South Bend, Indiana.
- Indiana University Southeast (IU Southeast) is located in New Albany, Indiana.
- Indiana University – Purdue University Fort Wayne (IPFW) is located in Fort Wayne, Indiana. IPFW is operated in cooperation with, and is administered by, Purdue University.

IU faculty, students and scholars from all over the above mentioned campuses access IUScholarWorks- a suite of services from the Indiana University Libraries and the Digital Library Program that includes an institutional repository, journal publishing, and data management options. The IUScholarWorks mission is to expand the dissemination and ensure long-term preservation of IU scholarship.

Persona

The primary users of IUScholarWorks website are IU Scholars and academic units and secondary users are public users accessing the articles and journals as study material or just for information seeking. IU scholars need this website to deposit their research data into IU repository and publish online journals. On the other hand the academic units want to make these research data available for their students and researchers to further enhance their academic credits.

Functional Specifications

The current website is not visually pleasing and does not allow for easy access. It is important to note the information Architecture of this website in order to provide easy navigation and search ability of contents with user experience perspective. The functional requirements for IUScholarWorks website are:

- Enable easy upload of the materials
- Raise awareness and educate users about(data) repository
- Easy to find tabs such as create journal, find journal, deposit data and help.
- Find description about every action instead of just mentioning contact us.
- Highlight the current events in scholarly communication
- Provide a discussion forum to bring all scholars together.
- Bring in new widgets for the articles from scholars.
- Search engine Optimization
- Create FAQ's with different use cases.
- Give one line message or pop-up when re- directing users from main page to the selected campus page
- Show small tutorial on the page for creating journals and depositing research works.
- Create direct links like create|deposit|find|help
- Reduce redundancy of data

Evaluation of Information Architecture

Introduction

IUScholarWorks (IUSW) is a set of services from the Indiana University Libraries and Indiana University Digital Library Program to make the work of IU scholars freely available and ensures that these resources are preserved and organized for the future. IUSW has put in a great effort to avail useful information to all the users visiting their website. The content of the site is good, being both comprehensive and comprehensible, and meeting the needs of the majority of 'users' ('users' here refers to students, faculty, and scholars of Indiana University and public readers from all over the world). This is proved in the homepage of IUSW listing of important links, which are provided with clean background, detailed information, and is visually engaging. However, accessing some of this information can prove challenging. While the site was designed with a clear information organization and useful navigation, it has suffered the problem of data redundancy. Too many inter-links for every page, combined with little or poor visually appealing layout, has initiated this evaluation and expected redesign. This evaluation will focus on five areas- structure, category, labels, navigation and access. In doing so, we will address the mission of IUSW and comparison with other universities scholarly communication website.

Structure:

The IUScholarWorks website follows the typical hierarchical structure. There are three global nodes 'research', 'journal' and 'Scholarly communications' that links externally to get into deeper levels. In general, users do not like sites that serve only to provide links to other pages. This is time consuming. As a result, it is not clear what IUSW wants to accomplish on their website. If IUSW is the owner of the content for all 3 pages, they should work on providing unified website which would lead to better user experience. The labels are very vague which makes it difficult for users to follow. One more major problem in the structure of IUSW website is the information selected to be displayed on their homepage. At great deal of important information regarding the mission IUSW wants to accomplish is buried within the website and difficult to find. Information regarding options to deposit research data, data storage policies, current news about new journal and the like is almost impossible to find if the user is not familiar with the website. The hierarchical structure of the website is narrow and deep, as a result it is difficult to find information or add information at the global level. The changes IUSW website requires in its structure are more detailed information to be displayed for its first time users. The mission the website lies greatly on the three major link on the homepage and thus the external linking reduces the impact made on its users on a larger scale.

The home page of the website can contain more explanations and can showcase the current happenings regarding IUSW, news, brief introduction to IUSW and try to market more about their website in the center of the page and/or educate users about the IUSW's goals/purpose etc. Instead of mentioning the campus under each tab like research>Bloomington, IUPUI, Kokomo or journals>Bloomington, IUPUI which is space consuming as well as redundant instead all the campuses can be put at one corner of the page. Or for more clarity giving one drop down menu for users to select their campuses is suggested.

Once the user clicks on journals tab, it is good to have some direct links taking users to perform specific tasks such as 'create | deposit | find | help' because the website says 'contact us for more information' and users might not really bother to contact the required people and they might turn away from the website thinking they shall visit later. It good to put out all the important questions users will have by default when they want to deposit their research or journal, on the website with a brief write up probably. User is being taken to IUSW repository when he/she clicks on research>Bloomington. One line explanation or a message pop up like "you are being re-directed to IUSW repository" would make the user ready for their next page. There can be a small tutorial on the page for creating journals, depositing research. At least a write up with use cases with FAQ's.

Categories:

The IUScholarWorks has information which are redundant and diverting from main focus IUScholarWorks has a basic homepage with no primary link as such but three links called research, journals and data. Apart from these 3 link homepage contains the basic contact us and about links. The 'research' link is ordered using location principle and it offers are options to select individual campus. It is easy for user to select what he/she wants to do on this website. For example, if the user wants to deposit his/her research data then they select research, if they wants to publish journals, they select journal and similarly data tab where user can archive and increase their research data.

The research link (along with selected campus, e.g., Bloomington) takes user to IUScholarWorks repository which has a welcome screen with basic FAQ's and basic information about repository. Here the information a user seeks is a particular community where he/she wants to deposit their research data. So the information on this page is organized based on Alphabetical order from the LATCH principle starting from A□ African American and African Diaspora Studies Department to T□ Trickster Press. The user can either scroll down to select their preferred community or can enter in the search engine. Once the user enters the preferred community, the user can either deposit their research data (using login) or can just browse through the articles listed based on metadata as Category like by issue date, authors, titles, and subjects.

The journals tab links the user to the IUScholarWorks Journals homepage where the list of Journals are ordered based on Alphabets starting from A□ Artifacts to T□ The World is Our Home. The user can again scroll down to search for their preferred journal or use the search engine on the right side of the page. The homepage also gives a brief explanation of how the online publishing systems helps its users. Suppose user clicks on view journal option under each listed journal, it takes them to particular journal where the articles are ordered based on different search criteria like if it is Hierarchical based, then the volume number with date is displayed based on ascending or descending order. The user has an option to login and submit their works here.

The data tab has no sub□ links in it as only the data pertaining to users' questions and doubts are answered here helping users with how their data is managed, stored etc. The problem here is the information categorization of a site become difficult as new information is added. At the lower levels information is generally categorized alphabetically. At a global level information is grouped into categories presumably by the need of its user's expectation. While the information organization is easily understood at lower levels and consistent with user expectation, the top levels groups are inconsistent and fail to relate to each other. Grouping is given prior importance for this website as merging information efficiently helps in ease access of information to the users. The goal of categorization is crucial as it changes and brings new content and mission. In evaluating information categorization it is very helpful to track similar or sister sites used within the domain. 'About Scholar Works' and 'Scholarly Communication' tabs can be grouped together as latter is a part of ScholarWorks and has similar introductory and functionality features. However, the different categories widely vary in amount of information the website provide. Also, it is hard to follow why there is very few tabs on the left vertical bar.

Labels:

Labels on the IUScholarWorks are unclear and ineffective. Many labels are created only to fill a need and do not nudge well with other labels. There is lot of variation and inconsistency in labeling. However, it does not completely leave users spellbound, but definitely deviates users from the website. Links at much lower levels should be shorter and should not include works such as 'Contact us' too many times on single page. There is no FAQ, alternative menus and one liner explanation for each of the main links available for its users, which forces users to open the link and go deeper and only find light to all their doubts and return to homepage. This only leaves them frustrated. Biggest problem of all is that there is no search option. Since the information is arranged alphabetically, user must scroll down to find specific article or journal available. Giving search option will help users find information easily and reduce frustration.

Navigation and Access:

The organization structure of this website is not intuitive. The site is most frequently accessed through Google, with user's typically typing 'iusw' into the search engine. This provides the IUSW link first in the list of matched returns, which is good, although the link is not accompanied by any page title. The majority of users describe the site as easy to navigate. However, in reality, when given a task to find specific information, users often had several attempts before completing the tasks set. Whilst most felt that their lengthier than necessary search for information acceptable and reflective of either their lack of familiarity with the Internet or specifically with the IUSW site, we recommend a review of the main menu bar and the contents under each section. The organizational structure of this website is inconsistent due to uneven grouping and labeling categories which leads to difficulty with navigation and access. Some information is almost impossible to find and to remember its location within the website. For example contact of the IUSW. Their email addresses are located on research page (which is not directly available on the homepage) and are difficult to find even on the page. As navigation is greatly dependent on structure and organization, highlighted issues greatly impact the navigation and site access. This is particularly important as the menu site navigation is structural with very few associative navigation.

There are many problems within the website with structure, categories, labels, navigation and access on Indiana University Scholarly Works website. There are many ways to fix all those problems. All these problems are to be resolved over time with regular updates and adaptability. There needs to be high emphasis on the revision of the content so that it supports deeper structure. In comparison with University of Washington Scholarly communication website, the IUSW is more organized and condensed now. The labels are more consistent and informative. Ideas on how to improvise the IUSW website can be compared and learn from University of Washington website. This website is especially useful in comparing labels. Modifying the existing IUSW site is unlikely to rectify major problems with deep structural and organizational issues. Thus a complete redesign of the website is necessary. Redesigning improves the overall efficiency of the website.

What is IU Bloomington Management Service?

Indiana University provides private and Open Access cloud storage and preservation solutions for IU-affiliated researchers, free of charge. Alternatively, consultations with our team can help researchers find the right third-party data storage, preservation, and access solutions to meet their needs. We also offer workshops and one-on-one consultations on how to meet Data Management Plan requirements set forth by grant funding agencies such as the NSF and NEH.

Who manages this service?

Indiana University Bloomington's Data Management Service is a joint partnership between the Indiana University Libraries, UITS, Office of the Vice Provost for Research, and the Data to Insight Center. As experts on research preservation and access, the IU Libraries manage this service on a day-to-day basis.

How does the IU cloud storage and preservation platform work?

The Libraries and UITS have partnered to leverage existing technologies (the IUScholarWorks repository, the Scholarly Data Archive (SDA), and the Research File System (RFS)) in order to provide a flexible, free data storage platform for researchers—especially those searching for solutions to comply with funding agency Data Plan mandates.

For in-progress research, researchers may use the RFS for short-term storage of data, using the SDA as a backup mechanism.

For completed, "fixed" research, researchers may store their data privately in their personal SDA accounts and manage access in the traditional way: transferring files to those who request them, on a case-by-case basis.

For those who wish to make their fixed data searchable or openly accessible, researchers can upload it to the IUScholarWorks repository, where the data can be described, stored, and made discoverable by others. Researchers may assign an embargo to data in IUScholarWorks, keeping the data discoverable—but not accessible for download—for up to five years.

What types of formats can I deposit?

You can submit any format, including custom formats designed especially for your project. We provide migration services, as community standards change with time, for the most commonly used formats. Visit the DSpace repository.

IUSW About page

IUSW Contact Us Page

1000 words Essay

The proposed website's sitemap and wireframe are inferred based on the strategy and scope documentation and the evaluation of Information Architecture. The information is more balanced and less redundant compared to the current website. However there are certain issues which does not allow for the proposed changes to happen easily. Issues are technical as well as political for the client. One such problem we come across my report is that the two main tabs- Research and Journals may have different website instead of having all the data under IU Scholar Works. There are too much of data under Research and Journals. Instead of having all of them under IU Scholar Works, it is better to have research and journals under IU Libraries. The user coming to IU Scholar Works looks for research data and Journal article under only Bloomington campus. In which case it is questionable as to why IUScholarWorks is giving information about other IU campuses such as Kokomo, IUPUI etc. It is much simpler if IU Scholar Works hosts information regarding research data and journal article affiliated to IU- Bloomington students, faculty and academic units only. Probably user can be redirected to the links containing scholarly communication of other campuses. In that way my client website- IUScholarWorks can be maintained easily in terms of Information Architecture with manageable data in hand and more concentrated with one campus.

When my client was contacted regarding this issue, we learnt that there are lot of other things to consider such as the Dean for scholarly communication of all the campuses is one. Dean is in charge of deciding what data remains in the IU Scholar Works website and thus prefers to have everything under one website instead of having to maintain many websites.

The proposed website prototype will increase the website's usability and attract more users. Users can be now provided with more up to date information and each user can do specific tasks as desired as opposed to the current existing website where users are left confused as all the users are brought into ne page and asked to navigate deep down to the desired web page which is cumbersome as well not what a user prefers in any website. With having a moving image on the home page with happening news/information piece provided by the people of IU Scholar Works, users can be more aware of current news the minute they enter the website. The video on the right side of the proposed wireframe page is evident to bring success for IU Scholar Works by having demo videos on How-to deposit scholarly works, How-to publish online journal, conference talks held by the Dean, Head librarian etc. and some useful information regarding IU Scholar Works deposition, creation of online article policies. The widgets on the right side of the page are the statistics collected over a period of time. It has been inspired by eScholarship, University of California. Most popular article of the month can be fetched by using data analysis tools such as Google Analytics. The most frequently accessed article, total number of viewers etc. can be made visible to the users on the Homepage of the proposed website.

The wireframe of the proposed website is structured and distributed equally throughout the website. The Home page button, research tab, journals tab as opposed to the current website is placed on top of the Homepage of the proposed website as a navigation tab and a drop down menu containing the sub web pages of each tab. The wireframes are numbered beginning from Home page for better understanding of the subpages and links. There are new additional features added in the proposed wireframe such as widgets to view the current statistics of articles and journals. The center of the Homepage will have rotating images of people in IUScholarWorks and any flash news happening in IUSW. This gives a pleasing visual and instant update about the happening event to IUSW users. The drop down menu helps users to have a look at the subpages with just having to keep the cursor on the tab.

Using a software called Axure, the wireframe has been created with almost a website look-alike prototype with functional links. The top of the webpages contain Indiana University symbol with combination of crimson red and cream. When clicked on the IU symbol or the name- Indiana University, user is taken to the homepage. When contacted the actual client Stacy who is the e-science data science librarian, many valuable feedback was taken and presented the website prototype to her, she was impressed to see the suggested changes and the distribution of Information around the website. But as mentioned in my earlier points, there are many political aspects pertaining to the current website changes. If given more time and access to more information about IUSW, the proposed website will be made more functional and played around with color combination and add more widgets. As of now the journals tab is empty. With more time and details, this website can be changed into very reliable information source about IUScholarWorks. For any business, even for education as a business, website in today's technology is the main gateway to the business products for its customers. So, information architecture on the website matters the most. The current website does contain all the necessary information to its users but that is not sufficient. Arranging the information in a way that appeals to all its users as well easy to maintain the database over time in very crucial to any Information Architect. The current website lacks the up to date maintaining and polished information distribution. That can be overcome with making the suggested changes and additions on the website. The role of an Information Architect is very demanding in any website creation and maintenance in terms of Information Architecture. Not just while creating the websites' Information Architecture but over a period of time in continuous process of maintaining information architecture with changing technology, user needs and business goals.
